

Andrew Grossman, J.D., serves as the Chief Tax Counsel for the Committee on Ways & Means. He comes to the Committee by way of the Joint Committee on Taxation, where he served as Legislation Counsel for the seven years. In that role, he was the Joint Committee’s primary attorney on all matters related to the individual income tax. He also advised Members of Congress and congressional staff on matters related to tax incentives for higher education, a variety of Federal excise taxes, tax-related disaster relief provisions, and taxpayer compliance.

Prior to joining the Joint Committee staff, Andrew was an associate at Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom LLP, where he worked for four years, advising clients on a wide variety of tax matters. He has spoken widely on Federal tax issues, and the legislative process generally, for industry associations, at colleges and law schools, and at the District of Columbia Bar Association (where he previously served as a member of the tax section’s steering committee). Andrew received his law degree, and an LLM in tax, from New York University School of Law, a BA from Amherst College, as well as a Masters of Education from George Washington University. Prior to attending law school, he worked as a middle and high school math teacher for three years, in Boston and New York City.